

Short curriculum vitae of Dr. Sheikh Mohammad Fazle Akbar

Graduated in Medicine & Surgery from Bangladesh in 1980 and received Ph. D in Medical Sciences from Japan in 1993.

Working on development of immune therapy for chronic diseases and cancers using antigens, various forms of vaccines, adjuvants and different immunocytes, including dendritic cells. Has formulated and developed a new immune therapeutic drug for chronic hepatitis B. Involved in developing international collaboration with different countries and mostly with developing countries for development and application of new and innovative therapy for patients with chronic diseases and cancers. Authored more than 120 articles in peer-reviewed international journals and involved in compiling books and working in different capacities in scientific journals.